

Sheffield Hallam University - lecturer/senior lecturer

Sheffield Business School at Sheffield Hallam University is recruiting a new lecturer/senior lecturer in "strategic management, change and enterprise". Whilst this is a general post in organisational strategy, there could be opportunities to contribute to third sector courses such as the MSc in Charity Resource Management and a likely new MSc in Social Enterprise and Business Democracy and to join in research with the University-wide Centre for Voluntary Sector Research. Experience of working with voluntary organisations and/or public sector are specifically mentioned in the advertisement as one of the areas of experience which could be welcomed. It is a permanent post.

The announcement and link for further details are as follows

"Sheffield Business School is increasingly being recognised as a world class centre for teaching, learning and research. We aim to be a first choice for students and staff, a centre of academic innovation and research expertise, and an essential partner in helping business and industry professionals, working in public, private, and voluntary sector organisations. We aim to deliver relevant teaching and research that creates employable graduates and enriches industry and the professions through knowledge transfer.

These posts are available as a result of our expanding portfolio in strategic management, particularly in respect of small businesses, the public sector, and innovation."
